Protohistoric Period and European Contact A.D. 1450 - 1900's

The Protohistoric Period concluded the prehistoric era. The people of this period were hunter-gatherers and part-time horticulturalists who pursued a more nomadic lifestyle after the introduction of the horse.

Euro-American settlers began to move into the area in the 1800's and to trade with the American Indians (Apache, Arapahoe, Cheyenne, Comanche, Kiowa, and Ute) who lived here. The metal arrow tip shown here is an example of one of the prevalent trade items. During the 1880's, Euro-American settlers homesteaded this land. In the early 1990's, the colorful clay was mined to make bricks for buildings in Colorado Springs and Pueblo. Grazing and agricultural use by long-time local residents played an important role in the history of the Paint Mines.

THE STORY OF THE PAINT MINES

For well over 100 years, Coloradans have enjoyed Paint Mines scenery as well as its geological, archaeological, historical, and ecological resources.

Geology

The Paint Mines are named for their colorful clays that were collected by American Indians to make paint. Brightly colored bands, caused by oxidized iron compounds, are found in varying amounts throughout the many different layers of clay. When the outcrops erode, a hard capstone allows columns of clay to be preserved beneath them, creating fantastic spires called hoodoos. Selenite (gypsum) contributes to the color, and white quartzitic crystals dazzle the eye.

Natural geologic outcrops occur in the Dawson Formation that formed 55 million years ago during the Tertiary age when the region was wetter, warmer, and tropical. The Dawson Formation also contains the petrified tropical hardwoods used as materials for stone tools by prehistoric people.

Archaic Stage 5500 B.C. - A.D. 100

The Archaic Stage followed the Paleoindian Stage and was characterized by distinctive stemmed, corner-notched, and side-notched stone points fastened on darts. Throwing sticks called atlatls were used on the end of the dart to increase the projectile force. Archaic people relied on a wide range of foodstuffs, hunted game animals such as deer and pronghorn antelope, and gathered locally available plant foods. Archaic sites have grinding stones, known as manos and metates, that were used for processing plant material for food.

Ceramic Stage A.D. 100 - 1450

The Ceramic Stage (called the Developmental Period by archaeologists) was the time of the Plains Woodland culture. This culture was heralded by the appearance of pottery, the adoption of the bow-and-arrow, and a greater dependence on domesticated plants such as corn, beans, and

HISTORY

Archaeological studies indicate that humans have inhabited the Paint Mines for nearly 9,000 years. The plants, animals, and colorful clays encouraged prehistoric people to return to the area, year after year, for centuries. The Paint Mines are considered significant in the prehistory of the area, and this park is listed as an Archaeological District in the National Register of Historic Places. Throughout the history of the Paint Mines, people are known to have visited the area to gather the colorful clays, tinged with red, orange, yellow, purple, and gray hues, to produce ceramics.

Paleoindian Stage 7000 - 5500 B.C.

The earliest people to live in the Paint Mines area are commonly known as Paleoindians. These people were likely the descendants of the first Americans who migrated over the Bering Land Bridge from north-eastern Asia. The Paleoindian people hunted large game species such as mammoth, caribou, deer, and large bison, some of which are now extinct.

Ecology

Paint Mines ecology represents the connection among all elements of the park. The geologic formations create natural drainages abundant with wetland and riparian habitat.

The open plains dominate the area and support a mix of native short-grass and mid-grass prairie communities typified by blue grama and buffalo grasses. Some stream bottoms retain enough water to support vegetation such as mountain mahogany, low sagebrush, chokecherry, wild rose, and a variety of grasses, sedges, and reedy plants. A few junipers and pines are also found here.

as raccoons, skunks, and rabbits, as well as burrowing rodents, are also present. These diverse habitats support a variety of birds including owls, Swainson's hawks, ducks, Canada geese, mourning doves, magpies, and western meadowlarks. Various species of frogs and reptiles, including the short-horned lizard are also present.

Before the Euro-American settlers arrived, the area supported large herbivores including bison. Pronghorn antelope, mule deer, and coyote are found in this area today.

Thank You for Visiting!

The Paint Mines are home to many beautiful animals, reptiles, flora and fauna. During your visit, keep an eye out for these...

Short-Horned Lizard
(Phrynosoma douglassii)

This type of horned lizard is a member of the iguana family. As an adaptation to the dry, cool climate, the short-horned lizard has as many as 30 young at a time that are ready to live on their own from birth.

Lark Bunting
(Calamospiza melanocorya)

Known for its spectacular dance and song, the lark bunting was designated the Colorado State Bird in 1931. This member of the sparrow family has distinctly different breeding plumages, as the male is lack with snowy white wing patches, while the female is gray/brown striped.

Buffalo Grass
(Buchloe dactyloides)

Historically, this native prairie grass was a primary food source for the immense herds of bison once found on the Great Plains. It also provided early Western settlers with sod used to build their houses.

Montrose Visitor Center

Some things to do in and around Montrose:

If you are into antiques and general stuff, Tracy's is a great stop. I would not normally schedule a shopping activity, but Tracy is retired and works only when he wants to. He's willing to open one day for us. I'm thinking Sunday afternoon will work. Please let me know if you are interested, so I can make the appropriate arrangements.

A great stop is the Montrose Visitor Center, in the old Elks Lodge, 107 S Cascade Ave. There, you can pick up flyers for local attractions, the historic downtown walking tour brochure and buy some Montrose swag. Check out their web site, VisitMontrose.com

The Museum of the Mountain West, 68169 Miami Rd (east of town) offers guided tours that are well worth the price of admission. They require reservations for groups larger than 8. If you are interested, please let me know and I'll organize a guided tour for Monday. They are closed on Sunday. museumofthemountainwest.org . Plan on a minimum of 2 hours.

The Ute Indian Museum (part of History Colorado) is excellent. 17253 Chipeta Rd, (just south of town) Monday - Saturday, 9 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. Sunday, 11 a.m. - 4 p.m.

At the mouth of Cimarron Creek, just upstream from where it spills into the Gunnison River, stands a reminder of bygone days in railroading. The Cimmaron Canyon Railroad exhibit is located on Morrow Point Dam Road off US Hwy 50. The recently restored locomotive #278, its coal tender, a boxcar, and caboose stand atop the last remaining railroad trestle along the Black Canyon of the Gunnison route.

Other great attractions:

Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park; Ridgway RR Museum;
Fort Uncompahgre in Delta; Ouray; Telluride

With Ron Shaw

In 1958, or thereabouts, a Denver area doctor was bitten by the sports car bug. To soothe the resulting itch, he bought an Alfa Romeo Giulietta spider and joined two local sports car clubs: the Sports Car Club of America and the Denver Sports Car Club. All was not well with the little Alfa, which left him stranded on the road side on more than one occasion. In search of a more reliable sporting device, he settled on a blue 1961 Porsche 356 coupe.

Bliss was his for a time, first with the blue Porsche, followed by a yellow one, then a red one, and finally a red 911. Many happy hours were spent with his wife navigating on road rallies, their two young daughters bumping along behind the seats on the rear package tray. The good doctor and his wife got seriously into it, competing in the "equipped" class, with Curta calculators, Stevens Rallye Indicators, and dual hundredth mile odometers in their Porsche.

Gradually, however, the rallies became less frequent, with the daughters older now and no longer able to accompany mom and dad in the Porsche. Weekends were spent on fishing trips and other pursuits. Finally, in 1967, the red 911 moved on to another owner.

Many years passed and daughter Lisa, one of the original package tray passengers, was left with the job of disposing of the lifetime of possessions left by her parents. At the estate sale she saw the three club badges and said, "I never even knew they still had them," as she weighed the symbols of her dad's fulfilled passion, rendered in enameled metal, in her hands.

Ron adds:

"My point in relating the story is that even car nuts can move on. I found it interesting that the estate sale advertising had over 1,100 photos of items in the estate and there was not one single photo of any car-related item other than these badges. And that wasn't just the estate sale company making choices about what to show. There simply were no car related items in the estate. Not a car book, not a poster, not a model, nothing. It turns out the good doctor saw the car itself as a tool for rally competition. It wasn't that all the car enthusiast stuff was thrown out over the years. Apparently, they actually never had any of it!"
